View & Opinion

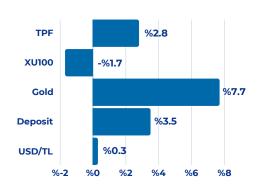

The CPI realization remaining above the CBRT's monthly forecast average has created an expectation that the interest rate cut decision will be postponed. We observed that long-term government bonds have lost value in line with this expectation. Funds focused on government domestic borrowing instruments with a portfolio weight in these instruments may especially reduce their long-term positions while taking positions on the short-term side. Moreover, we believe that funds under this umbrella have grown over 20% in terms of returns independently and that the demand for bonds will shift towards short-term government securities rather than the private sector. TPF will maintain its portfolio distribution and evaluate increasing the short-term interest-bearing instrument ratio slightly.
